Best Place for Logistics Transit in the USA Kansas City, MO

A single, centrally located distribution center in the Kansas City Area is the best distribution channel model for your operation for several reasons.

Kansas City is centrally located, making delivery times within three days to anywhere in the continental U.S. For ground service distribution from Kansas City, Missouri, 31% of the continental United States is in Zone 1, within one day's transit, 40% of the U.S. is in Zone 2, within two days' transit, and 29% of the US is in Zone 3, requiring three days' transit time.

Parcel shipments from our centrally located distribution center make sound economic sense due to the delivery transit times to these three zones. Parcel has five rate zones across the US, but from our Kansas City location, no zones are beyond the third level, minimizing delivery times and saving the money on what might otherwise be Zone 4 and 5 deliveries.

LTL shipments are balanced for both inbound and outbound freight, keeping backhaul rates to a minimum. This is great for reducing consolidation rates from manufacturers as well as keeping cost down for distribution throughout the United States.

From a warehousing stand point, there are many benefits to a single national location; managing low overhead, keeping reasonable stock levels with close oversight, and maintaining low inbound freight.

By keeping distance and overhead to a minimum, a single warehouse in Kansas City, Missouri ensures the most efficient distribution possible.
